A WARNING.

A Shady Firm of Klondike Brokers in San Francisco.

The public is warned against a so-called book-firm styling itself as J. G. Knowlton & Co., whose offices are advertised as at 302 California St., San Francisco. An investigation just made by the Stillwell Detective Agency shows that no such firm exists and that many people residing in the country have been duped by the operators of this bogus concern. On a printed letter head, "J. G. Knowlton & Co.," has been sending advertisements to the interior press in which they have drawn attention to the large profits made in grain speculation by their system of joint investment accounts. They inform the public that their information is of such a character and from such a source to make it entirely reliable. Incidentally they mention that they receive amounts for investment of from $20 upward. Just how much J. G. Knowlton has made by this system of swindling will never be known and those newspapers that gave them credit will never be paid for their advertising. All mail matter addressed to this alleged firm at 302 California St., where people of that name never have had offices, was forwarded to 220 Safe Deposit Building. At this place the following imposing lettering was found on the glass door: "The Klondike, British Columbia, Yukon Gold Mining and Developing Co., & the Klondike, Alaska Gold Exploration and Trading Co., Ernest Heymans." This place is nearly always closed but Ernest Heymans was found at a rooming house on Ellis St. He admitted that mail addressed to J. G. Knowlton had been received at his office until quite recently, but said that Knowlton was no good and that he had recently gone East. He describes him as a tall, clean shaven man. Heymans denied that he had anything to do with the two companies with the high-sounding names, quoted above, but said that Valentine & Co. of 20 Leidesdorff St., were at the head of that concern, and that he had for a short time represented them. Valentine was found at 20 Leidesdorff St., which is a "bucket"-shop. Valentine, for awhile, and until a short time ago, had an office at 302 California St., where J. G. Knowlton & Co., had their letters addressed. Valentine admitted knowing the firm of J. G. Knowlton & Co., denying, however, that he ever represented them himself, but saying that one of his former employees did represent them. Valentine and Heymans are the only people who admit of ever having seen the mythical Knowlton and even they disclaim all knowledge of his present whereabouts.

BEAUTY CONTEST.

The Opera Company.

The ear will be gratified by delightful music rendered by an exceptionally fine company of artists and a full chorus of thirty-five people, and the eye will be dazzled with beautiful scenery and gorgeous costumes when the Calhoun Opera Company appears at the Opera House next Thursday evening Jan. 27, presenting Offenbach's opera, "La Grande Duchesse." This company now in its fifth season is regarded everywhere as one of the foremost if not actually the foremost Opera Company in the country to-day. And this is almost entirely due to the energy and determination of Mr. Kirtland Calhoun, who personally directs all the production of this company. This season Mr. Calhoun has engaged a much larger company than he hitherto had and has augmented his orchestra, which will make his productions as near perfection as it is possible for mortal man to make them. We are promised a great treat and it is safe to say that this will be the musical and social event of the season, and that the theatre will be packed upon this occasion goes without saying.

FINISHED INVESTIGATING.

The Douglas Grand Jury Will Report Today.

The Douglas Grand Jury will report some-time today. The last witness was Daniel Taylor of Alpine county, who was inveigled over the line to Wailey's Springs by the officers and subpoenaed. He testified that six men left Diamond Valley saw mill, in Alpine county, and at Gardnerville two dropped out. On the return the wagon upset and one had his collar bone broken. He gave the names of the four men from the mill, who went to Genoa and joined the leechers.

The guilty men are securing lawyers as they expect indictment and also trying to get up an indignation meeting in Gardnerville to offset the possible action of the Grand Jury.

A Political Query.

Occidental Hotel,
San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 22, 1897.

EDITOR APPEAL:—

Can you tell me through your columns who the members of the first State Central Silver Committee were? Also who the members of the State Central Republican Committee were when the Nevada Silver party was organized? How many of its members were for silver and the Chicago platform? Who was the Chairman of the last Republican Committee and did he ever make a speech in favor of silver before the committee?

By answering the above in your paper you will oblige and settle a dispute among Nevadans.

Most Respectfully,

A SUBSCRIBER.

The APPEAL cannot recall the names of the first Silver Central Committee in Nevada, except that George Nixon was the Chairman and he can probably tell the names of the rest of the committee.

When the Silver party organized Enoch Strother was the Chairman of the Republican Central Committee. None of its members were for silver and the Chicago platform at that time as the Chicago platform had not been promulgated.

The Chairman of the last Republican Central Committee was and is ex-Governor Colcord. He once made a speech in favor of silver in support of a resolution he introduced before the Committee at Virginia City favoring silver at 16 to 1, but if the APPEAL's recollection is not at fault he was voted down by the Committee.

Since then, however, the entire Republican party of Nevada have absolutely repudiated the bimetallic doctrine.

The Jubilee Pilgrims.

Sheriff Kinney, Geo. Tyrrell and Gilbert Briggs are having a hard time of it in San Francisco. The city is so crowded with visitors coming in to celebrate the jubilee, that a place to sleep is about the hardest thing to find in town. Kinney after tramping the streets nearly all night, looking vainly for lodgings, finally asked a policeman he knew to take him to the station house on the charge of vagrancy. He was obliged to tip the cop with a dollar to get arrested, but he got shelter for the night and wasn't brought up in Campbell's Court until nearly noon, so he got a good chance to sleep. He tipped the trusty with $2 and got out without being compelled to stand trial.

George Tyrrell and Gilbert Briggs tried nine hotels and sixteen lodging houses and was turned away from all. They finally went to Golden Gate Park and found a shelter from the blast in the old log cabin where the Midwinter APPEAL was once published.

They wrote the APPEAL that this is how they spent the first night in town, but how they fared Monday night is not known. They say that the old forty-nine times and forty-nine prices are all the go there now.
